A PASSIVE CRIME.

BY THE DUCHESS.

CHAPTER IX.

ALL KNOWN.

Next morning, sitting in her own room, discussing the pest and her chocolate, Mrs. Neville grows suddenly serious over a letter just opened, and which not only disturbs, but very greatly perplexes her.

It is from Mr. Penruddock, demanding an interview, and begging her to name an hour in which he may speak to her upon a subject of much importance, both to him and her.

There is no mention of Maud in the letter; yet it so unmistakably means business in every line, that Mimi feels uneasy, and, ringing the bell, summons Esther to her aid—the woman having proved herself of sound judgment upon several occasions when Mrs. Neville had found herself in want of good advice, and knew not where else to look for it.

For two long hours she and Esther remain closeted together, at the end of which time Mrs. Neville, opening the door, comes out into the corridor with an air of open triumph and gladness in her whole demeanor, that contrasts rather oddly with the pink lids and heavy eyes that betray the fact of her having been crying bitterly. In her hand she bears a letter, which is addressed to George Penruddock.

Esther, going on to Maud's room, after some persuasion induces her to send a note to Dick, desiring him to come to South Audley Street at a particular hour—that is to say, at nine o'clock that evening.

* * * * * * *

The lamps are carefully lowered, the curtains drawn. There is sufficient light to discern objects, but hardly enough to read the features of Maud Neville, who, reclining in a low chair at the upper end of the room, sits idly gazing into vacancy, whilst swinging slowly to and fro a huge black fan.

Upon a table underneath Mrs. Penruddock's picture two lamps are burning dimly. Mrs. Neville is lounging in a solemn armchair, and is to all appearances enjoying life in its greatest intensity, which, to speak more plainly, means that she is slowly but surely killing time in the attic of Morpheus.

The sound of a bell rings through the house; there is a pause, and then the door opens slowly, and Mr. Penruddock comes in with the beauty, dignity and repose which has a righteous cause to be addressed, and with his countenance stern and white.

It is at all times a forbidding countenance, no one has ever thought otherwise, though strangely handsome, but to-night it is very nearly repulsive.

He advances to where Mrs. Neville (who was suddenly roused from slumber to a full sense of the situation) is rising, pauses on his way, and shudders, perceptibly, as looking up by chance, he sees that he is before the portrait of his dead sister-in-law.

Mrs. Penruddock's large pathetic blue eyes are gazing down upon him, as often they gazed in life, sweet and earnest, and just now, as it seems to his distorted fancy, something more than all this.

In what are usually superstitions wifflin the last few moments, or do they wear a reproachful look, that thrills his whole being?

Is the beautiful face eager and expectant, as though she would demand at his hands the little one left to him in trust?

Recovering himself by a great effort, he goes up to Mrs. Neville, and says, in something formal to her about his gratitude for the interview thus granted.

He is perhaps going on to explain why the meeting was solicited, when the abrupt entrance of his son checks him for the time being.

A quick shade of anger crosses the young man's brow as he sees his father.

Instinctively his glance turns to where Maud is sitting, so far apart from the rest; but she is so enveloped by the shadows falling from the lowered lamps, that he can not distinguish her features in any degree.

He would have gone over to her at once, but Mrs. Neville, by a sharp gesture of command, stays him, and brings him to her own side.

"Stay, Dick," she says, quietly. "Your place is here—as yet."

So he stays by her, as in duty bound, though sorely troubled at heart.

"After all that I have urged, you have come," he says, coldly, turning to his father.

"Yes; to say that which I told you yesterday I intended to say," retorts Penruddock, stubbornly. Then, addressing Mrs. Neville, he adds, in a labored tone, "It would make matters much easier if I might speak to you alone, without the presence of—Miss Neville?"

There is a covert insolence in the hesitation that he shows before pronouncing Maud's name that makes Mrs. Neville angry and indignant.

"If what you have come here to say refers to Miss Neville, it is both her wish and mine that she should be a listener to it," she says, slowly. "Therefore, do not hesitate, but commence at once, and let us hear, if you please, that which you have come hither to speak."

"That is as you desire, of course," Penruddock returns, calmly; "and, indeed, it is but little of your time I shall require. I would merely remark that I shall never, under any circumstances, give my consent to an alliance between my son and your adopted daughter."

At this, Maud, who until now has sat silent and almost motionless, starts into life.

She rises to her feet, and, though still keeping well in the shadow, turns to confront Penruddock.

"Reserve your disapprobation, sir," she says, in a voice low but distinct; "there is no occasion for it, still less for your consent to my marriage with your son. As he will himself tell you, I have already told him, and very distinctly, that such a union is utterly impossible."

Dick makes a movement as though he would go to her, but Penruddock detains him.

"You hear what she says?" he exclaims, eagerly. "She has refused you. Let it rest there. It is all at an end. Surely you would not press the matter? Have you no self-esteem? Have you no pride?"

"In this case, none," says the young man, sadly. "It is my happiness, my life, for which I plead."

"But she tells me plainly that with her own lips she has rejected you."

"If," says Dick, earnestly, going up to Maud, and taking both her hands in his—"if she will also tell you, in duty with her lips, but honestly and from her heart, that she does not love me, I shall then resign all hope of ever gaining her. I shall cease to weary her with my presence and my asseverations of affection, and leave her free to wed a happier man; but never until she has told me that. You may there are spare yourself all further trouble on my account."

He pauses, as if overcome by emotion, and then goes on again, in a voice that trembles slightly, "I await my sentence, Maud, speak!"

But she does not speak. Twice her lips move as though she would unwillingly have given voice to some thought, but no articulate sound escapes her.

Presently she lifts her sad eyes to his as if in mute reproach, and then two tears gather within them slowly, and as slowly fall one by one down her pale cheeks.

"Dick, come here," says Mrs. Neville, nervously, her voice trembling.

He obeys Maud's cold hands, he whispers hurriedly, "I shall wait forever."

And then goes back to Mimi's side.

"If you mean to defy me in this matter," says Penruddock, who has overheard him, "you can take the consequences on your own head, and you know very well what those consequences will be. Henceforth you and I shall be strangers, and I will do my best to forget that I ever had a son. But I warn you that such mad marriages bring only grief and disgrace in their train."

"There shall be neither grief nor disgrace through me," says Maud, faintly.

She is still standing, and has her hand on the back of her chair as though to support herself.

"It is the first time," goes on Penruddock, remorselessly, and viewing the heart-broken interruption, "that a blot or stain has fallen on our house or name!"

"Silence, sir," cries Dick, furiously turning upon him; "but no more can be said on either side, for at that instant the attention of all is turned upon the door, just inside which, upon the threshold, Esther stands, with one arm extended, as if she would demand silence.

There is something in her whole attitude and demeanor that is remarkably striking, and which engenders fear and expectation in every breast.

The looks of all are fixed on her as she comes slowly up the room, the tall, majestic figure clothed in black, and drawn up to its full height.

Her manner is expressive of mystery and long-suppressed excitement. Of all present in the room, Mrs. Neville alone possesses a clew to her thoughts.

Silently and slowly she advances until she has reached Penruddock.

Here she comes to a standstill, and confronts him with gleaming eyes and parted lips.

"No blot, no stain upon your house or name? You dare say that! Have you lost all memory of the past? Does your conscience never speak?" she repeats, mockingly. "Is murder no crime? Have a care, Penruddock! And answer me, if you dare, this question—Where is the child Hilda?"

Penruddock starts back, his face growing livid. Yet only for an instant does he lose his self-control; rallying by a mighty effort, he says, glaring savagely at Esther, "This woman, this fanatic, lives but to torment me! Leave the room, I command you! Your idle ravings have nothing whatever to do with the subject we are now discussing. Begone at once, or I will force you hence!"

Esther pays not the slightest heed to that, but pointing toward the picture, and gazing sternly on Penruddock, says, "See where her mother looks down upon you! Do not her eyes haunt you? Where is the little one, the little heiress of Penruddock, who stood so fatally in your way to her house and acres? Answer!—where is she?"

"She is dead—drowned, as all the world knows!" says Penruddock, gloomily, answering her against his will, as if in some-wise compelled to it.

"It is false!" cries Esther, triumphantly. "She is not dead! She lives! She is here to claim her own! Behold her, villain, tremble!"

At this moment Mrs. Neville turns up to their fullest height the two lamps that stand beneath Mrs. Penruddock's picture; and Esther, holding out her hand to Maud, says, in a loud tone, "Hilda Penruddock, come forward!"

Obeying the gesture, not the words, which as yet she fails to understand, Maud comes slowly forward until she appears in the full glare of the lamps, and right beneath her mother's portrait.

Standing thus, silent and half bewildered, she is so exactly like the beautiful painting above her, as to call forth an exclamation from Dick.

Mrs. Penruddock is dressed in cream-colored satin; the girl is attired in cashmere of the same shade, trimmed exquisitely with old gold and some costly lace.

It would be a difficult, indeed, an impossible matter to decide which is the loveliest, the dead mother or the living daughter.

As the extraordinary likeness dawns upon Penruddock, he is completely overpowered, turns aside his head, and pauses.

Above even the startling resemblance to the mother, he sees in the grown girl the features of the little child so cruelly, though passively done to death.

Again the whole terrible scene in the cottage garden flashes before him, again he watches, with cold persistency, until the tiny heiress meets, as he supposes then, and has till now believed, with her death.

He throws up his hands, as though to fling from him the hateful vision, and turns fiercely upon Esther.

"It is all a lie!" he exclaims, loudly—"a cleverly concocted scheme; but it shall not avail you much. It is an old story. Accidental likenesses have been tried before this, but an impostor always overreaches himself."

"So I perceive you are right," returns Esther with deep meaning.

Maud, white as an early snowdrop, is clinging to Mrs. Neville, who has her arm around her.

Dick, at a little distance, is listening with intense excitement, to the strange revelations now being made.

"Who ever saw the child again?" says Penruddock. "She was washed out to sea. All inquiries were made. No stone was left unturned to discover her; but it was too late. There was no one, not a living being, in such a way it occurred; no one saw the fatal accident."

"There you are mistaken. Two saw it," says Esther, solemnly. "You and I!"

"I repeat again, I saw nothing of it!" says Penruddock, hoarsely.

The ground seems slipping from beneath his feet. His parched lips seem barely able to form his words, and he with difficulty supports himself.

"You were present!" says the woman, relentlessly. "You stood inside the library window, and I saw you there, crouched as I was in the bushes at the other side of the river."

"In the bushes!" stammers Penruddock.

"Yes: I had come to get a glimpse of my darling at her play, and watched you as, with gloating eyes, you watched the child creep nearer and nearer to her death."

Fearful is now the expression on the countenance of the wretched man.

"Without one word of warning, without one appeal for mercy, you left life left to your charge by a dying brother, you looked, with a cruel longing, to see her perish!"

"'Tis false!" Penruddock, with very great difficulty, contrives to say.

"Though you never touched her, though the crime was a passive one, there was murder in your heart that day, surely as you are shivering here before us all!"

"It is all a fabrication," says Penruddock, feebly, wiping his forehead.

Then he glances, in a stealthy fashion, at his son—the boy for whom this horrible thing has been committed—to see if there be condemnation in his looks.

"Dick, do not believe it!" he says, in a tone full of pathetic entreaty.

He looks so old, so broken, that Dick is touched, and going up to him, places his arm around his neck.

"I believe nothing against you father," he says, gently; "the suit of that. But pray control yourself, and let Esther tell her story."

"When the deed was done and the fatal plunder taken, you rushed to the water's edge," goes on Esther, who declines to address any one but Penruddock, gloating over the fact that he plainly covers beneath her glance, "and, but for the timely assistance of a strong desire to save did not possess you. Had you pursued your search to the bend in the river, hidden by the drooping alders, you would have seen the little white figure floating onward with the light of Morpheus in the stream. You would have seen me running along the bank in wild pursuit; and you would have seen, too, the poor child drawn from the water by Gilbert Saumarez."

"Gilbert Saumarez! Her!" exclaims Dick, in the utmost surprise.

"Yes; he was a guest at the vicarage at that time, as you, Penruddock, may remember. He shall himself tell his own story."

She beckons with her hand, and Saumarez, who has plainly been waiting in the anteroom, on receiving that signal, comes up to them.

"Captain Saumarez, tell us all you can of this strange tale," entreats Mrs. Neville, with faltering accents.

"I have very little to tell; but it's all quite true," says Saumarez, after a swift glance at Maud's pale face. "I was fishing lower down upon the river on that day, the 14th of July, when, looking up, I suddenly saw a little thing appear in the water, and a woman—that woman there," pointing to Esther—"running along the bank. I jumped in, pulled the child out of the river, and saw that it was Hilda Penruddock, whom I knew well. Only that very morning I had been playing with her up at the cottage. I restored her to this woman, who represented herself to me as the child's nurse, and thought no more about it, as I should of course see her mentioned in conversation at the vicarage if I had had time; but, unfortunately, I had made up my mind to leave that day, and finding on looking at my watch that I should be late for the up-train, I rushed home, seized my things, bade my friends farewell, and within an hour was steaming up to town. Four days afterward I started for India, where, as you all know, I remained for six months."

"But you knew Maud—you recognized her in town?" asks Mrs. Neville, in great agitation.

A suspicion of shame crosses Saumarez's face, darkening it for a moment.

"Yes, last year," he says, unwillingly. "I called here one day, and Esther passed through the hall as I entered. I knew her at once, and asked for the child. She was, I think, about to deny all knowledge of her, when Miss—Miss Penruddock, with whom I was not acquainted at that time, came out of some room, and, looking me full in the face for an instant, passed on. Her wonderful likeness to her mother, who was well known to me, struck me at once. I had heard of the adoption by Mrs. Neville of some strangely pretty child, and, as if by inspiration, the truth occurred to me. I questioned Esther of it, and she at once, taken off her guard, confessed all."

"Then why did you not immediately speak?" demands Dick coolly.

"It was no business of mine," responds the other, shrugging his shoulders.

"But surely, you might have spoken," says Dick; "and it seems remarkable that you did not."

"No doubt I should, some time or other, have mentioned the circumstance, only that the woman had implored me to keep silence; saying that she had waited for years to have revenge on some one; and I really thought it a pity to spoil the planning and plotting that had lasted for so long."

"Yet you made love to my niece, knowing all that you did," says Mrs. Neville, gravely.

"In that matter, madam, I acknowledge I erred," says Saumarez, lightly, though he bites his lip. "But all is fair in love and war. I loved her as a girl over whom a cloud rested, knowing her in my heart to be an heiress, and of irreproachable birth. Nay, hear the exact truth," he says, with a somewhat reckless laugh. "I am not so rich as the world deems me; and thought if I could win Miss Neville, I might afterward prove her to be Miss Penruddock, and so secure her fortune. But I failed. At first I thought only of the money to which she was entitled; but now, and always, I shall think that, were she penniless and unknown, the man who gains her love will be richer than any soul on earth. You believe me, I am sure?" he adds, turning abruptly, and most unexpectedly, to Hilda.

"Yes; I believe you," she says, earnestly; and then—very sweetly, struck by the extreme melancholy of his expression—she comes a few steps nearer to him, and holds out her hand. He takes it, presses his lips to it, hastily but fervently, and without another word quits the room.

"It is, I plainly see, an unnecessary question; but, for all that, I will ask if you have quite made up your mind that this ridiculous story is true?" demands Penruddock, angrily, addressing his son, upon whose countenance no disbelief can be read.

"Quite!" says Dick, readily, who has forgotten to think of anything beyond the fact that the stigma attached to Hilda's birth has been removed.

"Then you acknowledge her?"

"As my cousin? Yes, certainly."

"Then, as certainly, you are a beggar!" says Penruddock, with a harsh laugh.

The young man starts as if shot, and puts his hand to his forehead. For the first time he realizes what all this may mean to him. By what right now shall he speak of love to the woman who is all in all to him, whose image occupies his heart? Their positions are reversed; she is the possessor of land and fortune; he is now the lonely outcast.

He draws a deep breath, and then rouses himself. Going up to Mrs. Neville, he bids her good-night, in a low tone, that still does not falter.

"All this has been too much for you, and—my cousin," he says, gently, though without looking at Hilda. "To-morrow, everything can be discussed more thoroughly; but for to-night enough has been said."

"We shall see you here to-morrow, I hope?" says Mrs. Neville, anxiously.

"I think not. It will be better not," says Dick, with a faint smile, "I shall have many things to see to, and my father will, of course, require me."

At this mention of his name, Penruddock turns his head, and all present notice how terribly his face has changed within the last few minutes.

As if all hope has died within him, he looks crushed and broken, and very pitiable.

There is, too, within his eyes a somewhat vacant expression that contrasts very powerfully with the insolent demeanor of an hour ago.

Eh, Dick?—eh, lad?" he says, in a confused fashion, putting his hand to his head, and slightly turning his face sideways. "What are you saying of me? I heard my name. Don't believe them, Dick! It is all false; every word!" Then, in a tone of anger, almost abject entreaty, he adds, in a whisper, "Don't you condemn me, Dick! You have not the right to do that. It was all for your sake, Dick—all for you!"

"Come away. Come home with me, father," says Dick, hurriedly and anxiously.

A touch of deep pain, mingled with shame, mars the beauty of his features as he listens to his father's words, which are a confession of his guilt.

"Home! Where is that now?" says Penruddock, vaguely, disregarding his son's effort to lead him from the room. "From the castle to the cottage—that is a fall, indeed! And," sinking his voice, "I can't go to the cottage, Dick—the river is there!—always the river!" with a strong shudder. "And it never ceases—it flows on and forever! I can hear it always in my dreams at night!"

"Rouse yourself. You are dreaming now, I think," says Dick, who is as pale as death.

"No; not now," says the old man. He looks a very old man now indeed, so strangely altered are his figure and mien. "It is too late now for dreams. If what she says be true, all is over, all is at an end!"

"The end is not come yet," returns Dick, bravely, throwing up his head with a certain proud gesture that brings tears into the eyes of one who is watching him.

He closes one hand firmly, as though to defy misfortune, while into his face there comes a nobility, a sense of dignity, that perhaps it lacked before.

"You have still enough to satisfy every want," he says, addressing his father; "and as for me, the world is before me, and I shall conquer it in defiance of fate and evil fortune. All is for the best, and we should be thankful that the little one was saved. You are thankful, father, are you not? Say that you are thankful," he asks, with extreme earnestness.

It is as though he had completely and entirely dissociated the love of his manhood from the delightful little companion of his earlier days.

"Yes, yes—deeply thankful!" says Penruddock, in a strange tone, hardly recognizable. "A weight is lifted from my heart—a load from my soul—that has lain upon them for many a year! Now it is raised, my heart feels lighter. But," looking helplessly around, "my head is bearing the burden now. It feels like molten lead. And there is a sound as of many voices—and—"

A deep groan escaped him; he staggered, and, but that Dick hastily caught him in his arms, would have fallen heavily to the ground.

CHAPTER X.

FORCED TO BE HAPPY.

It is two months later, and already Penruddock has lain for six weeks within his quiet grave.

For some days after that fearful seizure—consequent on the destruction of all those hopes he had purchased even at the price of crime—he had lingered in an unconscious state, knowing no one, hearing and seeing nothing, but muttering, murmuring, raving, till exhibit drowsed—I might have saved her—but no—let her go—all for my boy—all for my son!"

Then the fertile, scheming brain had come to a standstill; the heart, that in all its many years had known but one pure affection, had ceased to beat, and Penruddock was no more.

Mrs. Neville had called at Dick's rooms, where she visited every day during his illness, and had seen Dick and conversed with him many times, of his father's state alone—no other topic had been touched upon.

On two occasions Hilda had accompanied her, but on those days the young man had been either accidentally or wilfully absent.

Not once during all these long weeks had the cousins met. They had never, indeed, seen each other since that last momentous meeting in South Audley Street, when Esther's disclosure had made them change sides, and had changed the fortunes of both; so happily for the one, so disastrously for the other.

Yet, about that time there was a policeman in that quarter who for many nights had kept a sharp watch upon a young man, well dressed, but with his collar turned up to his ears, who was walking up and down, like a burglar, for he would stand for an hour without flinching opposite a certain house, gazing upon nothing—so far as X 91 could see—except a faint streak of light that came from an upper window.

Finally X 91 grew tired or ashamed of his suspicions, and, comforting himself with the thought that this eccentric young man was either a harmless lunatic or an admirer of the upper housemaid, let him gaze in peace.

* * * * * * *

To-day is too lovely for description. "The sun has drunk the dew that lay upon the morning grass;" the very birds are silent from excess of languor; the flowers droop and grow pensive beneath the heat, and all nature seems at rest.

"The wind had no more strength than this,
That leisurely it blew.
To make one leaf the next to kiss,
That closely by it grew."

In the castle, on this golden September morning, scarcely a sound can be heard. The inner world seems as lazy, as averse to action of any kind, as the world without.

Three days ago Mrs. Neville brought Hilda down to her birthplace, but the girl has refused to find comfort or pleasure in the grand old castle. Wealth has come to her, and, for the time at least, happiness has departed.

There is a pallor in her cheeks, a fountain of hushed fear in her expressive eyes. Dick goes to Mimi's heart; but having extracted a promise from Dick that he will not leave England without bidding them farewell, she can only wait patiently, if unhappily, for what is yet to come.

It is coming very quickly that for which she waits—the solution of all her doubts.

Even as she and Hilda are sitting together in one of the morning-rooms, silent, but full of thought, a footstep sounds in the hall without, the door is opened, and Dick Penruddock stands before them, pale and haggard, but always the same Dick in one pair of eyes at least.

"I am very fortunate in having found you at home," says Dick, in his most formal manner. "I have come down here because I promised, and because I could not leave England without bidding you good-bye."

He takes Mrs. Neville's hand, and presses it warmly, with a faint, a very faint, smile.

"Good-bye?" echoes she, in dismay, as though the fear of this hour has not been tormenting her for days.

"Yes; I am about to leave the country, never more to return to it."

He has not dared to glance at Hilda after the first involuntary look on greeting her.

"But this is all so sudden, so dreadful!" says Mrs. Neville, who is at her wits' end. "What is your purpose in leaving? Where are you going?"

"To New Zealand—anywhere. I hardly know whither; and, indeed, it matters very little, so long as I get well away from the old world and all its associations."

"How you must hate the old world!" says a soft voice close to him, that has a suspicious tremble in it. "Do you mean to carry nothing from it but regrets?"

"Nothing!"—shortly.

"Is everything forgotten?" asks the soft voice again, even more tremulously this time. "Can you remember no happy hours?"

"My deepest regret," says the young man, with infinite sadness, "lies in the fact that I shall never be able to forget those happy hours."

Mrs. Neville, kind and considerate soul that she is, has stepped into the conservatory for the time being, therefore they are virtually alone!

"Dick!" says Hilda, looking and speaking very tenderly and very reproachfully.

"Don't!" says Penruddock, hastily. "Do anything but speak to me in that tone. It is more than I can bear. For weeks I have been trembling myself to meet you with proper coldness, and now, by one kind word, with one gentle look, you would seek to undo all my labor.

"And why, if I may ask, should you want to meet me with coldness?"

She is very close to him by this time, and has laid her hand upon his arm.

"There is no reason why I should tell you, because you know."

"I know!—what is that I know?"

"Do not torture me."

"I have no desire to do that. But you have not yet told me what you do know."

"Oh, cruel!" he exclaimed. "You know that you are rich now, whilst I have nothing, or next to it. I—in fact," says Dick, mournfully, "I am too much for you now, whereas I might have been before."

"But you are the same Dick as you were then," argues she, "except that you are a little more—I mean, a great deal more unkind."

"Am I?" says he. "It is very likely. Misfortune embitters us all."

"Won't you look at me, Dick?"

"There is no need to look at you. Your image is engraven on my heart. I can see you at every moment, and shall see you, go where I may."

"Nevertheless, look at me; it may soften you a little. Oh, Dick, I don't want this odious money; but I do want you. Now I have no one to love me except you," says she, "and you will not, I hope, think badly of me."

"I could never do that. But it is impossible. Do not let us talk about it."

His voice breaks a little.

"Then you refuse me?"

"Yes; because it is for your own good."

"No; because I happen to have more money than you possess. Let us have the truth, at all events. Say that that is really what you mean."

"Well, then, yes, since you make me say it. I could not be indebted to my wife for—for everything."

"No doubt you are right," says Miss Penruddock. "Pride before all things, no matter how many hearts may be broken by it. She means to be sarcastic, but only succeeds in being severe.

"Mine is a just and proper pride," he says. "Oh, very well! Then it is not worth while, I suppose, to say anything more about it?"

"No, indeed," he sighs.

"And you are quite determined to leave England forever, and to go to New Zealand."

"Quite."

"Then," cries she, "since you insist upon it, I shall give this hateful money to a lunatic asylum, and, whether you like it or not, I shall go to New Zealand, too."

"Maud!" says he, in his overpowering agitation forgetting her real name.

"Yes: I shall. Nothing shall prevent me," says Miss Penruddock.

And here, we very much regret to say, she so far forgets herself as to place her arm around his neck, and to burst into tears upon his breast.

So for the next few moments, at least, Penruddock's trip to the other side of the world is delayed.

He drops his hat, and encircling her fondly with his arms, for a full minute is quite ridiculously happy.

Then he breaks himself, and sighing deeply, says, "There must be an end of this. This will never do, you know," in a most miserable tone.

"Never!" says Hilda, who has quite recovered herself, and in whose blue eyes a malicious twinkle may now be seen.

Does not victory already lie with her? No wonder, therefore, that she rejoices.

"Come over to the sofa," she says; "and as we must, to please you, give away our detestable though rather comfortable income, tell me, which do you consider to be the most deserving of all the asylums?"

At this point Mrs. Neville coming in, and seeing them sitting together on apparently amicable terms, goes up to Dick, and kissing him on either cheek, tells him, without a word of explanation, that he is a "dear boy," and as worthy as any one can be of her "dearest girl," and that she is happier to-day than she has been for a very long time, and several other things that are equally pleasant to hear.

All which so overpowers Dick, that he has not sufficient courage to say anything that shall damp her satisfaction, and Hilda carries the day.

They have been married now for four weeks, and are in Italy, or Egypt, or St. Petersburg, or somewhere—we really have, at the present moment, quite forgotten where.

At all events, we may safely say that, be they where they may, they are two among the very happiest mortals the world contains.

THE END.

A Rose by any Other Name.

Mr. Jollneck had been engaged in a row with the elevator boy in the flat where he resided, and had succeeded in making that juvenile functionary exceedingly wroth. About fifteen minutes after her had gone up to his rooms, a stranger came to the elevator.

"Boy," he inquired, "is there a gentleman in this flat by the name of Jollneck?"

"No, there ain't," replied the boy gruffly. "Are you quite sure?"

"Of course, I am. I've been engineering this elevator ever since this flat was built, and I ought to know."

The stranger left, and shortly afterward came back, looking like a man who had heard something.

"I say, my boy," he remarked pleasantly, "is there an old bird roosting around in a pen on the top floor of this shebang?"

"You bet there is," responded the boy, with a fraternal smile of sympathy. "Climb in and I'll hoist you up there in about two shakes of a sheep's tail. When you get up to the top you can track him down the hall by the ornithes on the floor."—Merchant Traveler.

A beekeeper having been told that a lad, through being repeatedly stung by bees, had become impervious to any unpleasant sensation when attacked by them, resolved to experiment on his own person. He kept a record of the number of times he was stung, and when he began to erase feeling the effects of the stings. The result was that all sense of feeling had gone when he had been stung thirty times within a few weeks.

A Conscientious Witness.

Counsel (to witness)—The previous witness swore that when found he was breathing like a porpoise.

Witness—I dunno 'bout dat, sah.

Counsel—You were present?

Witness—Yes, sah.

Counsel—Examined him carefully?

Witness—Yes, sah. I zamined him keerfully.

Counsel—And yet you will not swear that he was breathing like a porpoise?

Witness—No, sah

EBENSBURG, PA.

FRIDAY, - - - - APRIL 9, 1886.

COUNTY COMMITTEE MEETING.

The members of the Democratic County Committee are requested to meet at 1 o'clock, p. m., at Armory Hall, in Ebensburg, Monday, April 12th, 1886, for the purpose of fixing date for holding the Primary election and transacting such other business as may be for the general welfare of the party. A full attendance requested.

W. HORACE ROSE,
Chairman Democratic County Committee.
Johnstown, Pa., March 26, 1886.

THOMAS V. COOPER, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, has issued a call for a meeting of the Committee at the Union Republican club rooms in Philadelphia, on Wednesday, April 14, for the purpose of fixing the time and place for holding the State Convention.

REPORTS have been received from every important wheat county in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Kansas and Missouri. They say the prospects of the growing crop are very favorable in Indiana, Missouri and Ohio, fair to good in Michigan, and poor in Kansas. All show an important improvement since the recent rains.

RIDDLEBERGER, of Virginia, keeps himself before the public as continuously as though he was a full-fledged statesman. He is acting on the advice of the retired politician who told his son that the way to success was to get his name as often as he could in the newspapers. "It don't matter how you git in," said the old man, "only so you git thar."

ON Tuesday last Messrs. Drexel & Co., of Philadelphia, sent a draft for $36,000, through Rev. Charles O'Reilly, Treasurer of the Irish National League of America, to Justin McCarthy and Joseph G. Biggar, both of whom are Irish members of Parliament, and W. F. Maloney, Treasurer of the Irish Parliamentary Fund. This sum, or the most of it, was contributed by citizens of Philadelphia.

ALTHOUGH Dennis Kearney has not been much heard of lately east of the Rocky Mountains, he is yet in the flesh and keeps an intelligence office in San Francisco for persons seeking servants and for servants seeking places. He still insists that the "Chinese must go," and the sign over the door of his office has on it "No Chinese need apply." Every Sunday afternoon he makes a speech on the sand lots to a thousand or two workingmen and harangues them in his well known style until his throat becomes sore.

DISREGARD of a notice from a drinking man's wife not to sell him any liquor has cost a Pittsburg saloon keeper $500, a jury ten days ago having allowed the woman damages for that amount, the highest sum permitted by the Act of Assembly. This is said to be the first action brought in this State under the law of 1875, fixing a penalty for such sale of liquor after notice not to do so. As the Philadelphia Times in referring to this case remarks: "Very little new liquor legislation would be really needed in this State if the old liquor legislation were firmly and impartially enforced."

THE Mexican soldiers' pension bill passed the lower branch of Congress on Monday last by a vote of 158 yeas, to 68 nays. The bill consists of only two sections and is of the most sweeping character. The first section directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the names of all surviving officers, soldiers and sailors who enlisted and served in the war with Mexico for any period during the years of 1845, 1846, 1847 and 1848, and were honorably discharged, and their surviving widows, on the pension roll at the rate of $8 per month, from and after the passage of the act, during their lives. The second section directs the Secretary to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry the act into effect, with a proviso that the act shall not apply to persons under political disabilities.

THE champion bigamist in this county is Dr. Wm. H. Boyd, who is now in prison in Arkansas, charged with horse-stealing. He confessed the other day to the Sheriff with whom he boards that he had been married to eleven women, and made out a list which shows that his selections were made from six different States and Territories. He is strengthened in the hope that he may be convicted as a horse thief, and that he will not be tried for bigamy. He began the marrying business in 1863 at Staunton, Va., Mary J. Hunter being his first victim, and from 1874 to July, 1885, has averaged one wife per annum, except that in 1883 he was married twice in Arkansas. His last dupe was Josephine M. Eals, of Texas, in July, 1885. If he hadn't been arrested as a horse thief and could have kept straight on in the marrying line, as he no doubt would have done, he would have bagged his twelfth wife before the present year expires.

AS LONG as Congress refuses to submit to the different States a Constitutional amendment empowering the President to veto objectional clauses in an appropriation bill while he approves of others, the country will annually be saddled with a corrupt and log-rolling River and Harbor bill which literally robs the treasury of many hundred thousand dollars for the mere purpose of enabling Congressmen to make themselves popular with their constituents. There are improvements of rivers and harbors which are of vast national importance and require the passage of an annual appropriation for that purpose. If the bill stopped at that there would be no wrongful appropriation and no complaint. The bill, however, never stops there, but is always honey-combed with large gifts of money for the most useless and indefensible purposes, thus compelling the President to approve it as whole or veto it, the latter course having been very rarely adopted.

MRS. HUTTER, who, for many years, has been the female inspector of the Soldiers' Orphans' Schools, is the widow, we believe, of W. W. Hutter, who was the editor of a lively Democratic paper at Harrisburg when David R. Porter was Governor. At that time Thaddeus Stevens lived in Gettysburg, and the conspicuous part he played in the memorable "Buckshot War" was fresh in the recollection of the Democrats in every nook and corner of the State. Hutter, who was an exceptionally able newspaper writer, and hated Stevens with all his might and all his soul, published some very bitter attacks in his paper upon him, for one of which Stevens indicted him for libel in Adams county, where the paper had a considerable circulation. When the case was called in Court and a jury selected Hutter's lawyer handed to the Judge a previous pardon issued by the Governor to Hutter an hour or so before the latter left Harrisburg for Gettysburg. Of course the case ended then and there much to the chagrin and mortification of Stevens and Hutter returned to Harrisburg. We have personal knowledge of another previous pardon issued by the same Governor two or three years afterwards. A well known citizen of Blair county, now deceased, but who at the time spoken of lived in Bedford, and was a devoted personal and political friend of Gov. Porter, was required through his connection with a stage line from Shippensburg to Baltimore to make the former place his temporary residence. During a hot political campaign the editor of the local Republican paper made a savage personal attack in his journal upon the gentleman referred to, for which the latter publicly cowhided him in the street of the town. The editor had him arrested and bound over to court for assault and battery; employed three of the best lawyers at the Cumberland county bar to assist the District Attorney, and had a host of witnesses at court to swell the bill of costs. The defendant went to Harrisburg two days before the trial, saw the Governor and got from him a previous pardon, and when the case was called in court, a jury had and the opening made, he, the defendant, arose from his seat and coolly stated to the court that he had a document he wished to present for its consideration, and handed to the Judge the previous pardon. He was, of course, acquitted and had neither lawyer's fee nor any costs to pay. That was the last previous pardon issued by a Governor of this State, at least so far as we have any knowledge.

THE great strike on Gould's Southwestern Railways instead of having been adjusted by arbitration last week, as there was every prospect that it would be, was put beyond the reach of a settlement two days after the conference in New York between Gould and Powderly, by Gould's railroad manager at St. Louis, Mr. Hoxie, who refused to either arbitrate or to take back into his employ more than about one-third of the striking Knights of Labor, their demand being that he must reinstate all. The situation was rendered still more complicated on Saturday morning by a few of the strikers in ambush firing on a freight train strongly guarded two miles from Fort Worth, Texas, killing one or two of the guard and seriously wounding several others. The Governor of Texas has sent a strong military force to Fort Worth and the running of the trains at that point has not since been interfered with. The trains, however, are not manned by the Knights of Labor as they were before the strike, but by other employes who have taken their places. The Knights have issued a bitter manifesto against Gould's duplicity in agreeing, as they allege, with Powderly to arbitrate the dispute and then through Manager Hoxie refusing to do so. Everything was quiet along the different roads on Tuesday, and traffic was unimpeded, but the Knights of Labor have been left out in the cold, and their last Saturday's armed attack on the train near Ft. Worth has seriously damaged their cause. Mr. Powderly himself has never approved of the strike from the beginning, but has pronounced it as impolitic, unnecessary, and without any justification. The presumption is very strong that the strike could have been adjusted right after it took place, if wisdom and prudence had governed the leaders of the Knights of Labor organization who were on the ground and undertook to manage their side of the dispute.

WITHOUT assuming to dictate to the County Committee, we have a few words to say in reference to the time to be fixed at its meeting on Monday next for holding the Democratic primary election. The Democratic State Convention will not meet at Harrisburg until the 18th of August, more than four months after the meeting of the Committee on next Monday, and as one of the most important duties of the return judges of the primary election will be the selection of four delegates from this county to the State Convention, it seems to us that sound party policy and the convenience of the voters will be best promoted by fixing the date of the primaries not earlier than the middle or latter part of July. They have been usually held sometime in June, which is at least a month earlier than they ought to have been held, for reasons that will readily suggest themselves to every one who resides in the country and has farm work to do. Besides this, it is not good party tactics to put a County ticket in the field five months before the November election, for the reason that it might enable the opposition to form combinations which it would be unable to do under different circumstances. A campaign of three months, or thereabouts, between the primary election and the 2d of November, is surely long enough to enable every man on the ticket to get out of his candidacy all that is in it. Let the campaign be short and sharp. These are our views briefly stated in regard to the matter, and are suggested to the County Committee for what they are worth.

MR. MANNING, Secretary of the Treasury, is recovering from his recent alarming illness, and it is believed at Washington that he will soon tender his resignation to the President.

THE LEADER OF THE KNIGHTS

A Man Who Abhors Strikes and Looks Ahead a Long Way.

In a chat in New York on last Sunday week about himself and his connection with the organization of labor, Mr. Powderly said:

"I was born in Carbondale, Pa, in January, 1849, of Irish parents, who came to this country in 1826. They were Catholics. I was their eleventh child, there being four girls and eight boys in the family. My father was a day laborer. I was sent to school at 7 years of age, and continued at school until I was about 13, when I went to work for the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, having the care of a switch on one of their railroad branches. I worked at this for several years and then was employed in the machine shops of the company. I left Carbondale in 1869 and went to Scranton, where I found work in the shops of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company. At night I studied drawing and mechanical engineering, my ambition then being to become a master mechanic. I was married in 1872. I joined the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union in 1870, and was soon elected president.

"My interest in trade Unions began in 1870. My idea was that men who worked at the machinist trade should understand each other throughout the country, so that they might be of assistance to each other. One of the aims was to make the subordinate unions schools in which should be taught the 'arts and mysteries of the craft.' You may know that in the papers which bound me as an apprentice those words were used. I discovered, after being a member of the union for some time, that it did not fill my ideal of what such an organization ought to be, and as a remedy for grievances it would not do much for the members. It was very narrow in view, too narrow, only recognizing and enrolling machinists and blacksmiths. I saw the poor laborers, carpenters, painters and other trades in the employ of the company, without any organization. I felt that the union should include all. I tried to induce the union to open its arms to all workingmen, but was defeated.

"In 1870 I was invited by a friend to walk out with him, and he took me to a meeting of the Knights of Labor. I joined that night. It was Assembly No. 88. I found there all crafts, and thought I had found just what I was looking for. No. 88 was then the only assembly in northeastern Pennsylvania; all of its meetings were very secret, and nothing was ever said of its existence outside of the meetings. Our idea was that we should secretly add to our strength and keep out politicians and other self-seekers.

"When the panic of 1873 came on I was laid off with many others. I went west through Ohio and Western Pennsylvania. I settled in Oil City, Pa., and became a member of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union there, and a month later was sent to the national convention of the Union at Louisville, Ky., in September, 1874. Shortly after I returned to Scranton and was employed at my trade by the Dickson Manufacturing Company. I did not work very long for them, because I was sent out to do many outdoor jobs, and as I have always been troubled with quinsy sore throat I could not bear the exposure.

I went back to Carbondale and worked at my trade. I tried to induce the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union to join the K. of L., but for a long time was unsuccessful. Of course, I worked secretly, having to take each man alone and sound him and convince him. The great obstacle was, as I have said, the contempt with which the machinists and blacksmiths looked upon other workers. At last my efforts were successful, and the union was disbanded and the members became Assembly No. 222 of the Knights of Labor. During this time I had worked among the surrounding towns, so that when the Carbondale Union joined the Knights there were several assemblies in the neighborhood. I had thus worked to win them to the Knights of Labor, because I saw that in the union all of their legislation about apprentices and shop rules would amount to nothing.

"With the introduction of labor-saving machinery the trade was all cut up, so that a man who had served an apprenticeship of five years might be brought into competition with a machine run by a boy, and the boy would do the most and the best. I saw that labor-saving machinery was bringing the machinist down to the level of a day laborer, and soon they would be on a level. My aim was to dignify the laborer. In the K. of L. I saw a good field for operation. In 1876 we organized a District Assembly of five or six assemblies in Lackawanna county, and I was elected District Secretary, an office which I have held ever since from choice. In 1877, when the strikes on the railroads swept over the country, many of our men, with many who were not of the K. of L., numbering in all about 5,000, were discharged and went West, settling in the Western States and Territories. Wherever our Knights went new assemblies sprang up. Up to this time there was no general head of the K. of L. So Frederick Turner, of Philadelphia, Richard Griffiths, of Chicago, Chas. Litchman, of Marblehead, Mass., Thomas King of Reading, Pa., and I met and held the first general assembly of the K. of L., at Reading, P., in January, 1878. We had then seven districts, representing Philadelphia, Reading, Pittsburg, Charleston, W. Va., Scranton, and Shawnee, O., and several other local associations, which I cannot not recall. Mr. Uriah Stephens, of Philadelphia, was elected the first General Master Workman, and I was elected to the next office, which was called Grand Worthy Foreman. We there changed the date of meeting from January to September. We next met in St. Louis. Mr. Stephens did not attend this convention, but wrote a letter recommending me for General Master Workman. After that I gave my entire time and attention to the work of my office, this being the first time that I had worked at any business other than my trade.

"The strikes of 1877 were caused by men not understanding one another. At that time I began to study the causes of that strike and of the distress of the workmen. I concluded that an organization should be perfected that would be a grand industrial school. I had no hobby. Others were for greenbacks, tariff revision, and a dozen other things. I had not read the writings of any theorist. I had never met a theorist. I was re-elected Mayor two or three times. When first elected I was not known outside of the laboring classes. It was said by my opponent that all sorts of trouble would come if I was elected. However, I was elected, and among other acts I discharged the entire police force of the city because I found that I must have men on whom I could rely. Then, during my administration the debt of the city was reduced about $20,000. Previously the debt had been annually increased. In 1884 the Knights of Labor had grown so large that the business of the order took all of my time, and I had to decline renomination for Mayor. We now have assemblies in England and Belgium.

"I have read Henry George's 'Progress and Poverty,' Spencer's 'Social Statics,' and Thornton on labor. I am not sure what my plans will be for the future. A syndicate of newspapers has offered to send me to Europe to write up the labor question as it is there. I do not believe in strikes, because I do not think there is any necessity for them. I believe that these troubles can be settled without strikes. The order has materially changed in a few years, is broader and more liberal than at first, less secrecy now, the oath has been abolished in the initiation, and only the word of honor is now required. The whole matter of the wage system is wrong. So long as one finds it to his advantage to buy labor at the cheapest price and the other demands the highest price for it, trouble will come. Profit sharing is the remedy. The Knights of Labor will not allow a whisky distiller or brewer, or a liquor seller, or one whose wife is a liquor seller, to become a member of the order, and I am now trying to prevent liquor drinkers from joining."—*N. Mississippi's Disgrace.

It is very satisfactory to have the assurance of a Jackson, Miss., correspondent of the New York World that there is a universal condemnation felt in that capital and throughout the State over the recent slaughter of negroes at Carrollton. While it is generally admitted that they were a bad lot and helped by their misconduct to bring their fate upon themselves, a creditable public sentiment calls for the punishment of their atrocious murder.

It is not so satisfactory to learn that "no warrants have been sworn out and no arrests made; no action has been taken by the State authorities looking to ferreting out and bringing the murderers to justice." No commonwealth or community can afford to let such crimes go unpunished, nor will Mississippi fail to suffer ineradicable disgrace if these murderers go free.

But there is nothing in the circumstances to warrant Federal interference; nothing for the President or Attorney General to take cognizance of; as it is reported they have been considering. The Carrollton massacre, like the recent lynchings in New Jersey, Ohio and Indiana, like the Molly Maguire troubles in Pennsylvania, and various other State disturbances, was a domestic affair, exclusively for the State to deal with; and to it alone must attach the responsibility and credit or disgrace, accordingly as it meets or shirks its duty. —Lancaster Intelligencer.

SOME time ago the Augustinian Society of Lawrence, Mass., a church organization which received deposits of parishioners, collapsed, and the depositors lost over $200,000. One of the aggrieved parties brought a test suit against Archbishop Williams, of Boston, the spiritual chief of the Lawrence pastor. The argument was that a pastor of a Roman Catholic church exercises in regard to the church over which he is placed only the delegated authority of the Bishop and acts only as an agent of the Bishop, and therefore that those transactions are to be regarded as made by the Bishop himself. The Massachusetts Supreme Court has just decided against the plaintiff, declaring that in order to charge the defendant it must be shown that he is liable on the contract. It is not sufficient that no one else is a promisor in it. The evidence was not sufficient to hold the defendant, and the instructions asked to that effect should be given. It is a wise decision. But this turning of churches into banks is a most unmitigated evil.

A LAD was crossing the fields in the country, some distance from any dwelling, when he was pursued by a large and fierce dog belonging to the gentleman whose land he was crossing. The lad was alarmed and ran for safe life. He struck into a piece of woods and the dog gained on him, when he looked around to see how near the creature was, and, tumbling over a stone, he pitched over a precipice and broke his leg. Unable to move, and at the mercy of the beast, the poor lad saw the dog coming down upon him and expected to be seized and torn, when, to his surprise, the dog came near, and, perceiving the boy was hurt, instantly wheeled about and went for that aid which he could not render himself. There was no one within reach of the child's voice, and he must have perished there or have dragged his broken limb along and destroyed it, so as to render amputation necessary, if the dog had not brought help. The dog went off to the nearest house and barked for help. Not receiving attention, he made another visit of sympathy to the boy, and then to the house, there making such demonstrations of anxiety that the family followed him to the place where the child lay.

A Word to Workers.

If your avocations are mentally or physically laborious, if they subject you to exposure in inclement weather, if they confine you to the desk, and are of a nature to involve wear and tear of the brain, and nervous strain, you may occasional require some renovating tonic. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the article for you, it stimulates the failing energies, invigorates the body and cheers the mind. It enables the system to throw off the debilitating effects of undue fatigue, gives renewed vigor to the organs of digestion, aroused the liver when inactive, which it very often is with people whose pursuits are sedentary, renews the jaded appetite, and encourages healthful repose. Its ingredients are safe, and its credentials, which consist in the hearty endorsement of persons of every class of society, are most convincing. Admirably is it adapted to the medical wants of workers.

ONE of the British officers in Egypt, who happened to have a glass eye, was one day examining a prisoner, a zealous follower of the Mahdi. "Why do you believe in the Mahdi?" asked the officer. "I believe in him," replied the man, "because he can work miracles." The officer immediately took out his glass eye, tossed it up in the air, caught it and put it back in its place. "D'ye think the Mahdi could do that?" he asked. The man was appalled, and couldn't say another word.

Thousands Say So.

Mr. T. W. Atkins, Girard, Kan., writes: "I never hesitate to recommend your Electric Bitters to my customers, they give entire satisfaction and rapid sellers." Electric Bitters are the purest and best medicine known and will positively cure Kidney and Liver complaint. Purify the blood and regulate the bowels. No family can afford to be without them. They will save hundreds of dollars in doctor's bills every year. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by E. James.

THE other day a common black snake about 18 inches long was killed in a road near Reading, this State, by some boys, who, after the manner of their kind, began playing with the dead reptile. Noticing that it was very rigid in one place they cut it open and found that the stiffness was caused by a small rat-tailed file which the reptile in some unaccountable manner swallowed.

Don't give up, there is a cure for catarrh and cold in the head. Thousands testify that Ely's Cream Balm has entirely cured them. It is a safe and pleasant remedy. It is not a liquid or snuff. It cures by cleansing and healing. Price 50c. at Druggists.

—Ex-Mayor R. W. Townley, Judge T. F. McCormick, E. H. Sherwood, Banker; J. Maguire, Banker; G. S. Davis, Banker; and J. O. Tichnor, Merchant all of Elizabeth, N. J., earnestly commend Ely's Cream Balm as a specific for catarhal affection.

—A few days ago Mrs. Keith, of Davinsville, N. Y., brushed a honey bee from her husband's coat when he entered the room. The bee lit on their little boy, aged one year, and stung him in the palm of the hand. The sting threw the child into convulsions and he died in a few minutes.

—We should have better preaching if the preachers were all sound and healthy men. Calvin may have had the dyspepsia, but it did him no good as a theologian. A Methodist minister, of Hartford, Conn., writes that Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" cured him of chronic liver disease and indigestion. His brethern of all denominations are respectfully invited to note the fact. Sick preachers are in poor condition to proclaim the gospel news. Sound bodies are wanted.

AN Albany, Ga., woman says that during the war she paid $20 for one spool of thread, $300 for a pound of tea, and $400 for a plain gingham dress.

NEWS AND OTHER NOTINGS.

—The town of Montrose, Neb., boasts of three newspapers, two variety shows, twenty saloons, two hotels, one jail and plans for a church.

—In January, 1885, his big scholars gave a Wilson county school teacher a ducking. He has just received $3,000 damages. This was in Kansas.

—"I feel bad!" Hunt's [Kidney and Liver] Remedy encourages sleep, creates an appetite, braces up the system, and repairs the wasted powers. $1.25 per bottle at druggists.

—At the recent marriage at Vienna of the daughter of the Grand Duke of Toscany to the brother of the Queen regent of Spain, the principal ladies in attendance wore dress trains from thirteen to nineteen feet long.

—A report from Grainger county, East Tennessee, says that County Trustee Jorty attempted to rob his own residence of $2,500 which he had deposited there, and was shot dead under the belief that he was a burglar.

—William Taylor, a brother of two other brothers who were lynched at Forsythville, Mo., about a year ago for murder, has been arrested, charged with the killing of M. H. Denmock, and it is thought he may share the fate of his brothers.

—Two youths got into a fight in the Knox College campus, Galesburg, Ill. While they were beating each other with shinny sticks, a fat old woman appeared, knocked down the larger boy, spanked the smaller, and then went calmly on.

A three story dwelling and a hennery, with 1,500 fowls, on the farm of Assemblyman Titus, near Ithaca, N. Y., were burned early on Tuesday morning. During the fire several farm hands were dangerously burned by the explosion of a can of coal oil.

—The wife of Nathan Griffith, of Westminster, Ontario, cut her husband's throat with a razor while he was asleep on last Friday morning. Her mind became unbalanced by religious excitement. She says she wants to kill her husband and go preaching.

—By the death of Lord Forester, another priest becomes entitled to a seat in the House of Lords. The new peer is a Canon of York, and by a privilege accorded to his ancestors by Henry VIII., has the right of remaining covered in the presence of his sovereign.

—It will not disappoint you. It is the best article known for purifying the blood and building up the health and strength. For 25 years erysipelas broke out in blotches on my face. I found no cure until I used Parker's Tonic two years ago. It is the medicine for me.—E. C. H.

—The Portland Oregonian says that 700 Welsh families from the coal regions of Pennsylvania have decided to settle in Eastern Washington Territory, between Spragus and the Big Bend country. The 700 families number, all told, 3,000 persons. The colony will leave Pennsylvania soon.

—A private letter from Concho county, in the cattle region of western Texas, says that the winter there thus far has been unusually mild—"most of the time like May or June in the Northern States." Only one-half of the one per cent. of the cattle and sheep of that region have been lost.

—Jerome Stevens, the farmer who was shot on Tuesday night of last week at North Fairfield, O., by thieves who were stealing grain from his barn, died on Friday. Elmer Ward, a rough character, has been arrested on suspicion. There is much excitement at North Fairfield, and lynching is talked of.

—By lack of open air exercise and the want of sufficient care in the matter of diet, the whole physical mechanism becomes impaired during the winter. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the proper remedy to take in the spring of the year to purify the blood, excite the liver to action, and restore health and vigor.

—During a heavy thunder storm at Danville, Md., on Wednesday morning of last week, lightning struck a house in which there were five persons. The house was torn to pieces. A young man was sitting on a trunk leaning against a window. His clothes were torn off, but he was not seriously hurt.

—An Iowa weather predictor says the last ten days of this month will be stormy, especially in the Northern States, and precautions should be taken to protect property from high winds, floods, sleet and snow. There will be gales over the lakes and Atlantic coast and the heaviest will be over the Mississippi basin about April 25 or 26.

—An illicit distillery near Gainesvill, Ga., which for six years has escaped detection, has been discovered and raided. The proprietor had dammed a small creek, ostensibly to make a fish pond, and under the dam he placed his distillery, with tunnels for ingress and egress. The smoke was conveyed to his house and passed out through the kitchen chimney.

—An audacious young man put his arm around a young woman who sat in the same pew with him during service in the United Brethren church at Ft. Wayne, on last Sunday night a week ago, and kissed her. She was so pleased that she laughed right out in meeting, and others joined with her. These young people are to be indicted for disturbing a religious meeting.

—At a dinner in Rondout the other day there was a German, just arrived, who had not seen paper money. A gentleman opposite took a fifty dollar bill from his pocket and attempted to hand it to the German, but dropped it into a dish of soup. He took it out as quickly as possible, and was waving it to and fro to dry it, when a big dog in the room snapped it out of his fingers and bolted it down with apparent relish.

—It is asserted that at least 20,000 colored people have left the States of Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina since the first of last July, and they are now going at the rate of three thousand a month. Emigration agents are at work among them, and are furnishing them with free tickets, even as far as California, under a contract that they will work for a certain length of time at a certain rate upon the ranches and vineyards of that State.

—Two weeks ago a young daughter of Jacob Niper, of Petersburg, N. J., walked two miles with her parents, wearing new shoes and red stockings. The shoes were tight and greatly irritated her feet. Three days afterward her feet began to swell, and three days later still both legs were swollen to nearly twice their natural size and the girl's mind became affected. On Tuesday of last week she was attacked with spasms, which continued for some time at intervals of from five to ten minutes. She died in great agony. Blood poisoning, induced by the coloring matter in the stockings, is supposed to have caused death.

—At noon on Wednesday of last week Wash Washington (colored) was executed at Martin, Texas, in the presence of five thousand persons, for the murder of Wills Durden a year ago. The condemned man confessed his guilt on the scaffold and said that it was right that he should be hanged. He stated that he was instigated to the crime by Ephe Durden, a half-brother of the victim. Ephe Durden was immediately arrested on the strength of Washington's confession. Washington exhibited great nerve. He rode on his coffin from the jail to a grove near the edge of the town, where the scaffold was erected, and passed his hat around for contributions to defray the expenses of transporting his body.

The Life Lesson

Learned by a Prominent Hudson Odd Fellow.

[From the Hudson (N. Y.) Register.]

Mr. John Elting, a faithful odd fellow (Past Grand, Lindenwald, No. 442) and a member of the Baptist Church, says: "I have been, as the most of my acquaintances in Hudson know, a sufferer from dyspepsia for ten years. Beginning with indigestion, sour stomach and flatulence, I became so weak that my body became a burden too heavy to carry, and my mind was weighted down with a gloomy despondency. After eating I felt as if I had a ball of glowing iron in my stomach; my abdomen would bloat and I was afflicted almost constantly with sick headache. A lady learning of my condition advised me to use DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, telling me what an I finite deal of good it had done her and others whom she knew. I began taking it in the latter part of August, and used altogether only three bottles, when it achieved in me the most wonderful improvement. I have now gained in flesh and feel stronger, happier and better than I have in ten years. FAVORITE REMEDY cured my friend, R. F. Hermance, of Ghent, of the lingering remains of malarial fever and of biliousness. Mr. Harvey Thomas, the grocer on Warren street, just below the Worth House, says that it has had wonderfully good effects upon him. Scores of my acquaintances say that having once tried it they would never again be without it. I have given it to my children, and found it to be the best medicine I have ever known for regulating their bowels and purifying their blood. The knowledge of this medicine I deem the greatest lesson of physical life."

A Battle and Its Victory.—"I carried the burden of dyspepsia about all my life," said Mrs. Pierce, a lady eighty years old, residing at Rochester, N. Y., "until about three years ago, when I began taking Dr. Kennedy's 'Favorite Remedy'—of Rondout, you know—and it has given me more ambition and strength than I have had since I was young."

How's Your Liver?

Is the Oriental salutation, knowing that good health cannot exist without a healthy Liver. When the Liver is torpid the Bowels are sluggish and constipated, the food lies in the stomach undigested, poisoning the blood; frequent headache ensues; a feeling of lassitude, despondency and nervousness indicate how the whole system is deranged. Simmons Liver Regulator has been the means of restoring more people to health and happiness by giving them a healthy Liver than any agency known on earth. It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy.

NEVER BEEN DISAPPOINTED.

As a general family remedy for Dyspepsia, Torpid Liver, Constipation, etc., I hardly ever use anything else, and have never been disappointed in the effect produced; it seems to be almost a perfect cure for all diseases of the Stomach and Bowels.

W. J. McELROY, Macon, Ga.

From Pole to Pole

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA has demonstrated its power of cure for all diseases of the blood.

The Harpooner's Story.

New Bedford, June 7, 1883.

DR. J. C. AYER & Co.—Twenty years ago I was a harpooner in the North Pacific, when five others of the crew and myself were laid up with scurvy. Our bodies were bloated, gums swollen and blackened, teeth loose, purple blotches all over us, and our breath seemed rotten. Take it by and large we were pretty badly off. All our lime-juice was accidentally destroyed, but the captain had a couple dozen bottles of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA and gave us that. We recovered on it quicker than I have ever seen men brought to by any other treatment for scurvy, and I've seen a good deal of it. Seeing I mention in your Almanac of your Sarsaparilla being good for scurvy, I thought you ought to know of this, and so send you the facts.

Respectfully yours, RALPH Y. WINGATE.

The Trooper's Experience.

Masseu, Basutoland S. Africa, March 1, 1883.

DR. J. C. AYER & CO.—Gentlemen: I have much pleasure to testify to the great value of your Sarsaparilla. We have been stationed here for over two years, during which time we had to live in tents. Being under canvas for such a time brought on what is called in this country "veldt-sores." I had those sores for some time, and was advised to take your Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which made my sores disappear rapidly, and I am now quite well.

Yours truly, T. E. DOZER,
Trooper, Cape Mounted Riflemen.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

WHAT IS DYSPEPSIA?

Among the many symptoms of Dyspepsia or indigestion the most prominent are: Variable appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach with unsatisfied craving for food; heartburn, feeling of weight and wind in the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration, headache, and constipation. There is no form of disease more prevalent than Dyspepsia, and none so peculiar to the high-living and rapid-eating American people. Alcohol and tobacco produce Dyspepsia; also, bad air, rapid eating, etc. BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS will cure the worst case, by regulating the bowels and toning up the digestive organs. Sold everywhere.

—John Mehaney, a bar-keeper at the Dixon House, Greensburg, on last Monday morning committed suicide by shooting himself with a revolver. A few years ago he was worth considerable money, but had squandered it and was reduced to earning a livelihood by tending bar. A wife and four children survive him.

—A gentleman from thy north of the county informs us that at about this time last year we had the best sleighing during that winter. He says his team hauled the biggest load of boards to this place on the 14th of last April that had been hauled during the winter, and on that particular day the sleighing was elegant.

—Mr. Charles Humphry, of East Conemaugh, died at the University Hospital in Philadelphia, on Thursday of last week. He had been ill for some time and had gone to the hospital with the hopes of being benefitted by their treatment. He was a son of Mr. David Humphreys, deceased, and was an engineer by occupation.

—An exchange tells how a farmer tried a new way of catching rats. He took a keg and filled it half full of water and placed cottonseed on top of the water, which floated on the surface. He then sprinkled meal on top of the cottonseed, and placed the keg in his barn. Next morning he emptied his keg of over a hundred drowned rats.

—George W. Lisher, of Franklin county, is feeding a steer that is a curiosity. The animal is pure white in color, stands seventeen hands high, is eight feet and ten inches long, girths nine feet five and a half inches, and weighs between 2,500 and 2,600 pounds. He is of the Durham stock, and possesses a velvety coat and is quite gentle.

—On Friday Maitland's steam laundry in Huntingdon was destroyed by fire. The building and machinery belonged to I. D. Kuntzelman, whose loss is $2,500; insurance is $1,500. Mr. Maitland's loss will be considerable. He has only $250 insurance. His lease expires on the 12th of May, when he intended to return to his home near Cresson.

—Mr. Ed. B. Scull, of Somerset, passed through this place to Cresson. Mr. Scull, it is understood, has been appointed Superintendent of the Cresson & Clearport railroad, under J. H. Boytts, his brother in-law, who is General Manager of the road. Mr. Scull's father, Ed. Scull, Esq., editor of the Somerset Herald, is one of the Directors of the road.—Johnstown Tribune.

—The indications are that we will have a backward spring, those who pretend to be posted on the weather being unanimously of the opinion that we will have but little good weather during this month. The general opinion also prevails to a great extent that the best place to buy dry goods, dress goods, boots and shoes, groceries and provisions, is at the store of John Owens, on High street where goods can always be bought at bottom prices.

—"Dozens of letters a day pour in upon Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., from people who have been benefitted by his popular preparation called Kennedy's 'Favorite Remedy.' And they often illustrate what this remarkable medicine accomplishes in some new and hitherto untried field of operation. Not infrequently patients come long distances to grasp the Doctor by the hand and express their gratitude for deliverance from pain."—Troy, (N. Y.) Daily Times.

—The prolonged controversy between Father M. P. Stack and Bishop O.Hara, of Scranton, which has been see-sawing through the courts for the last fourteen years, has at length been decided by Judge Thayer, in the common pleas court of Philadelphia. He decides that the exercise of priestly functions is not a property right,for the deprivation of which a civil suit for damages will lie. It is a common sense opinion that is in accord with the best law, keeping as it does a strict line of demarcation between church and state.

—The card of John S. Rhey, Esq., of Ebensburg, as a candidate for Assembly, appears in this week's paper in the proper column. Mr. Rhey is well known throughout the county as a man of ability and experience as a legislator, having served in the Legislature during the session of 1850-51 and '52 as a member from Armstrong county, where he then resided, the latter term having presided over that body as Speaker. He has been connected with the editorial department of the FREEMAN office for a number of years, and in that capacity has at all times labored earnestly and faithfully for the supremacy of the Democratic party. If nominated and elected, Mr. Rhey would make an active and efficient member and would serve the Democracy of the State with strict integrity and undoubted ability.

—Miss Helen Windsor, "Countess Phedora," in "Siberia," says the Johnstown Tribune, of Saturday, was handed a telegram last evening, just before appearing on the stage at the Johnstown Opera House, announcing the sudden death of her mother in New York. The young lady was quite overcome by the sad intelligence, but there was no person to take her place in the cast of characters, so she had to smother her feelings as best she could and perform her part. Once or twice while behind the scenes during the play, Miss Windsor gave way to her feelings and fainted, and it was feared at one time that she would not be able to reappear before the footlights, but she proved herself equal to the emergency, and answered every summons to go upon the stage promptly. This morning she departed for New York, another actress having been telegraphed for to take her place temporarily in the company.

A Terrible Accident.

On last Friday afternoon a little girl about nine years of age named Tibbott, a niece of Mr. John Hughes, farmer, was shockingly burned. The family had been boiling maple syrup at the spring-house and at the time all were out except the little girl. She was heard screaming but nothing was thought of it, as she was in the habit of singing and making a noise. When first seen she was running from the spring-house to the house through the high wind then prevailing with her clothes all ablaze. She ran through the house and out, and then back again before Mrs. Hughes could catch her and succeed in putting out the fire by throwing some carpet around her. She was badly burned from the waist up all around the body and was unconscious up until Monday morning when she rallied, and at last accounts was doing as well as could be expected.

Mrs. Hughes was severely burned about the hands and arms while trying to put out the flames and it will be some time before she will have the use of those members.

MORGAN HEGHES' REPLY.

EBENSBURG, PA., April 6, 1886.

Mr. Editor:—I see in your last week's paper a communication from Mr. George Berkey, in which he says he offered his wagon for the purpose of taking the dead body of Mr. Robert Murray to my house. Now the plain facts in the case are as follows: When I went up to where the body was, I asked Mr. Berkey for his wagon to take the body to my house. Mr. Berkey replied, "It is getting late and I have a good piece to go." I then said, "It will take you but a few minutes." Mr. Berkey then replied, "There are plenty of you." I then said, "Come on boys, catch hold." and William Richardson, Thomas James Fred Davis and myself carried the corpse to the house. Mr. Hildebrand was present but could not assist on account of having a steer which he was leading with a rope. I do not know who sent for the doctor as that was done before I came. As to Mr. Berkey offering his wagon and I saying that it was not fit is not correct and did not occur. I do not intend to bother any more about it, but if Mr. Berkey thinks the above is not correct let him call on me and we will go to Mr. William Richardson, Mr. Thomas James and Mr. Fred Davis, who were present and know exactly what did occur.

CLEARFIELD TWP., April 5, 1886.

Editor Freeman:—Thinking a few lines from this section might prove interesting to some of the many readers of your valuable paper, I have concluded to send you the following:

The roads in this part of the country have been, and are still, in a very bad condition.

Some of our neighbors are making maple sugar, and I hope they won't forget the printer man.

April flittings seemed prominent in this section last week.

Elmer, son of Mr. Arthur Wharton, aged about 17 years, who has been confined to his bed for over three months with what is supposed to be inflammatory rheumatism, is, we are sorry to learn, not improving any. What this young man suffers is beyond imagination, as he cannot be moved the least bit, so sensative is his limb from hip to foot. He has also lost in flesh considerably. We predict and hope that when the warm weather arrives it may tend to alleviate him from his terrible sufferings.

The Young Ladies' Sodality of this place, I have been informed, chanced off their handsome gold watch. Whoever was lucky enough to secure the watch for the small sum of 25 cents, we have not been able to learn. The money secured from chances is to go towards buying a banner for their society.

Mr. Lawrence Burgoon, of White township, we are sorry to state, had six lambs and several old sheep killed by dogs one night last week, and the question is, "Whose dog or dogs did the fatal deed?" Mr. S. J. Luther, of the same township, lost a valuable cow in the same week; cause, unknown.

A number of our schools have closed.

VIOLET.

Loretto Heard From.

LORETTO, April 7, '88.

DEAR FREEMAN: We are having quite a lively time here over the license question. Our borough limits are not so extended as are those of some of our neighboring villages, and at the upper end of town and really within it, but outside of the borough limits, is located a tavern, at which the ardent had for some time been dispensed with more freedom than discrimination, and much, it is said, to the detriment of order in the community. Accordingly, when the proprietor petitioned the Court for a renewal of his license, a much-signed remonstrance was sent up against it, which proved fatal. The indignant liquor men then procured the names of the men who had signed the remonstrance and posted the list in conspicuous places through town. Then some wicked temperance man, who evidently understood the cruelty of comparisons, retaliated by obtaining the names of the signers on the objectionable petition and tacking them beside the other paper, with the explanation: "Here are the other fellows: take look at them." The effect will be appreciated. All the fun is not over yet, but the temperance people are ahead at present. Yours respectfully. S.

Wilmore Items.

Mrs. Michaels, relict of Henry Michaels, died at her home in Wilmore, Friday of last week, at the advanced age of 75 years. Her husband died about fifteen months ago. Her maiden name was Clawson. She leaves four sons, all grown to manhood. Interment in U. B. cemetery on Sunday.

The weather is very disagreeable. No kind of farm work can be done. The snow is about four inches deep, and still falling.

A notice is up in Wilmore stating that a meeting will be held at an early day for the purpose of forming a coal comyany, at which operators from the East will be present, and all interested in the welfare of the community are requsted to come and "here" what is to be said on the subject. While there is no doubt the coal is to be had by shafting, it is doubtful if the present movement will be encouraged. M.

The Ebensburg Normal.

The Armory Building is being fitted up for the accommodation and convenience of teachers. The class rooms will be furnished with the celebrated Keystone seats and desks and provided with portable blackboards, outline maps, etc. The teachers' institute meetings will be held weekly and every advantage given to teachers for their improvement. New students are being enrolled daily, and the attendance for the opening session will be large. Superintendent Strayer is making arrangements to have the most interesting, practical and successful term ever held in Ebensburg. The teachers employed are entirely in sympathy with normal methods of teaching, which will be fully carried out in every department during the coming term.

A Wonderful Discovery.

Consumptives and all, who suffer from any affection of the Throat and Lungs, can find a certain cure in Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Thousands of permanent cures verify the truth of this statement. No medicine can show such a record of wonderful cures. Thousands of once hopeless sufferers now gratefully proclaim they owe their lives to this New Discovery. It will cost you nothing to it a trial. Free Trial Bottles at G. James' Drug Store. Large size, $1.00.

—William B. Moyer, one of the Democratic Commissioners of Lehigh county, has been arrested on the charge of promising offices for votes. It is alleged that he promised nine men places, and the trouble arose when he found he had only three positions to give.

OIL AND GAS NEAR HOME.

The Opinion of an Amatuer Geologist Who Talks as if He Knew.

A correspondent writing from Ligonier says he thinks it folly for Johnstown to go to Grapeville for gas. "There is," he says, "as good and perhaps much better territory a shorter distance from Johnstown. The range of hills running from the Conemaugh river, about three miles below Blairsville, and passing along the Salem Church and land east of Greensburg, is equally as good as the Grapeville range. There is another range in Cambria county as good as either of the above. The range runs from the P. R. R., a short distance west of the old Viaduct, at a place called Mineral Point. It extends in a southwesterly direction through Cambria and Somerset counties, connecting with the Negro mountain, and divides the two coal fields of Cambria and Somerset counties. There is a good show in these ridges for better gas and oil. I firmly believe that the Laurel Hill and Chestnut Ridge are the two great gas belts of Western Pennsylvania. The hundreds of deep ravines that start on both sides of these mountains, if properly tested, would supply the gas required for all time. These tests should be made pretty far up in the mountains. In testing one of the lower ranges, away from the mountain, the higher the hills and deeper the ravines and more broken the surface the better."—Johnstown Tribune.

Doctors' Bills.

Any person whose blood and liver are in good condition is all right, even in the midst of epidemics. This can be noticed in the life of everyone. If all would avail themselves of the advantages of restoring and maintaining the health of the body, there would be fewer doctor's bills and much less sorrow. The one thing needful and the one recommended above all others is Simmons Liver Regulator. The testimonials are counted by thousands, and its merits are undoubted.

ATTENTION FARMERS.—I respectfully call your attention to Williams, Clark & Co's, high grade Bone Fertilizers, viz: Pure raw bone meal; Royal bone phosphate; Ammoniated bone super phosphate. These goods are guaranteed not to contain a single pound of adulteration or make up weight in them. They are the cheapest goods for the money that was ever offered in the county. Call and see them, buy them and try them. Ten tons just received, at Geo. Huntley's.

MR. JAMES KING, of Johnstown, was a visitor to our town on Wednesday, having come to attend the funeral of Mr. Daniel O. Evans.

WILT—BAYLER.—Married, at Ebensburg, on Tuesday, April 6, 1886, by Rev. R. McCaslin, Mr. George W. Wilt and Mrs. Kate M. Bayler, both of Wilmore, this county.

OBITUARY.

EVANS.—Died, at his residence in Ebensburg, on Monday, April 5, 1886, Mr. Daniel O. Evans, aged seventy years.

The deceased was born in Montgomeryshire, Wales, in 1816, and resided there until the year 1840, having in the meantime learned the shoemaking trade from his father, who carried on the business in that country. In 1840 Mr. Evans came to this country and settled in Ebensburg, where he worked at his trade, and after a year or two married a Miss Tudor, sister of Mr. Richard Tudor, of this place, who, however, lived but a short time. In 1847, when the war broke out between this country and Mexico, Mr. Evans, who belonged to the military company here, went to Mexico, with the old Cambria Guards, under the late Captain Murray, performed his duties as a soldier until the end of the war, and returned home with the company. After his return he and Hon. Richard Jones carried on the tanning business for a number of years at the old tannery near Mr. David Shinkle's mill, on the outskirts of our town. After the dissolution of the partnership Mr. Evans, up to the time of his last illness, worked at his trade. In 1851 he married Miss Jane Evans, who bore him a number of children, seven of whom, two boys and five girls, are living, and all of whom are grown up. Mrs. Evans died about ten years ago. Mr. Evans was a man of fine appearance, honorable in his dealings, intelligent and well versed in general knowledge, was kind and social in his disposition, and will be greatly missed from the community. His funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon at 1 o'clock, and his remains were interred in Lloyd cemetery. Peace to his ashes.

AGRICULTURAL NOTES.

Mems Relating to Farm, Live Stock, Orchard, Garden and Lawn.

Take a small can of machine oil, or any other very liquid oil that is not corrosive, and pour a small stream of it on the colt's back from head to rump; then pour a little of it in the hand and rub it on the skin between the hind legs, and you will find that it will rid the animal of lice.

Strawberries require a great amount of moisture to make that large, handsome fruit that is always marketable. Irrigation or mulch will furnish this moisture. So few persons can afford the expense of irrigation that mulch, which is within the reach of every grower, is much preferable.

During the last season it was found that corn cobs dipped in coal tar and placed among the plants and squashes, proved beneficial in preventing the ravages of the squash vine borer. The attack of the insect, however, was not very vigorous. Possibly in some seasons much damage would result in spite of this preventive.

A Western New York farmer, who buys sheep from the West to fatten in the fall, says he last year made a profit when his neighbors made none by buying split and colored beans and feeding them with corn, instead of an all corn ration. He says two-fifths beans with corn makes the sheep thrive and fatten faster than full rations of corn.

Many persons are prevented from using petroleum on woodwork by fear that it will make the wood more inflamable. This is not the case. The oil enters the pores and so fills them that the wood is harder and less likely to ignite than before. Coal oil or crude petroleum, with something to give it body, makes a cheap paint for all wooden implements.

The colt should be halter-broken when a week old, and when allowed to follow the mother should be led at her side. Accustom the mother to work without it, and when plowing near enough to the stable, leave it there in middle of each half-day to have it suck, or tie it in the shade at the side of the field. A colt thoroughly halter-broken before it is weaned is half broken.

Hogs often become covered with ticks and lice. If a little sulphur is put in their feed occasionally it will help to rid them of these pests. Often hogs are covered with these parasites when the appearance of the animals would not lead the owner to suspect that such was the case, and consequently it is always well to examine them closely occasionally, so as to be sure that they have no such tax on their vitals, to steal away what should go toward making flesh and growth.

The greatest caution must be taken to catch a fox in a trap. Get a strong steel trap in good condition. Make a bed of chaff, where he will find it, and put a few scraps of roasted meat in and about the chaff. Let this bed remain a few days; a good trapper has patience. After you are sure the fox has been there several times, put more traps in the bed, lightly covered over. Securely anchor the trap with a light chain fastened to an iron rod driven firmly in the ground. Do as little walking about the chaff bed as possible, and wait for results.

Fanny Field, in the Prairie Farmer, tells how to make a home-made egg-tester: "Good egg-testers can be purchased for twenty-five cents, but you can make one that will do just as well. Take a wooden box large enough to hold a kerosene lamp; cut a hole in the top large enough for the top of the lamp chimney, and in one side cut another hole about the size and shape of an egg. Hinge the opposite side of the box so that it can be used as a door. Put the lamp in the box, close the door and partly darken the room, and hold the eggs, one at a time, between the eye and the egg-shaped opening in the side.

The Western Agriculturist says: "At many of the stock exchanges and livery stables where horses are kept for sale or trade, a part of the floors are nicely and purposely prepared for the improvement of the condition of horses that have been badly injured in the feet, limbs and shoulders. What is the remedy these men employ and rely on? The earth floor, that has stood the test of all ages. It acts as a preventive of the many evils that originate wherever the plank system is brought into use. It requires little more labor to keep an earth floor in good condition than to keep a plank floor in repair."

If time can be spared now for washing the trunks of fruit trees it is much the better. It prevents them from becoming hidebound. Hidebound trees are often started by poverty or unsuitable soil. Few soils can be too rich for fruit trees; if fertilizers can be had low most orchards are benefitted by manuring. If the ground beneath the trees is cropped with vegetables or farm produce manure must be applied. The trees then get some as well as the vegetables. If grass is grown under the trees, unless the land is alluvial and some food is brought down from higher land, surface dressing should be given every other year. It is an excellent plan to have orchards in grass, provided care is taken not to let the grass starve the trees.

A good "catch" of grass depends on the condition of the soil and weather, and on other influences affecting the germination and early growth. A good crop may depend on the quantity of seed used in connection with these influences. The usual quantities of orchard grass and blue grass (when light and mixed with chaff) is a bushel or two to the acre, and ten or twelve pounds of red clover. When mixed together one half of each of these quantities may be used. If the ground is in fine condition and everything favorable, a smaller quantity will bring a better crop than a larger seeding on hard ground with adverse weather. You can judge by your own knowledge of these conditions and by the usual success in your region in seeding in the way proposed, whether this treatment will be likely to answer. In some places it is necessary to mellow the surface of the ground freshly for a certainty in the catch.

HOW I RAISE SHEEP.

This was the topic of a successful wool-grower at the late meeting of the Iowa live stock men, and it is to be said that essentially the same treatment answers for East and West. He said: "I would prefer pure bred stock, but as that is expensive, I usually get grades and breed up, for it takes but a short time to breed up a good flock. I have always used pure-bred merino bucks, being convinced that for profit, where sheep are kept in flocks of one hundred or more, there is no equal to the merino and its crosses. I aim to have lambs dropped about the time grass comes in the spring. I want lambs early, yet not before there is pasture enough that the ewes will have plenty of milk. I keep a close watch, and if a lamb is dropped—unless it is warm weather—I see that it goes to the stable at once, and, as soon as possible, see that it sucks, after which no further care is needed, except in storms. I wean lambs by September first. During the summer I know of nothing better than good blue grass, and that kept pretty short, as sheep do not like long grass. I never feed grain in summer, yet, when pasture is short, I think a little grain would pay. I feed lightly at first in the fall, but by the time winter sets in I aim to give full feed of about one bushel of corn to one hundred head per day, with plenty of hay. While on dry feed in winter, it is important that sheep should have plenty of water. When the cold fall rains commence they should be kept dry, as no sheep will thrive when its coat of wool is soaked full of water. Good care and shelter are just as important as water and good feeding, for a sheep well sheltered will shear from one to two pounds more per fleece than when exposed to the weather, and the wool will sell for a higher price in the market; with fine wool sheep the wool can be left on until quite late in the season—first, because there is great danger of losing sheep by cold storms, if sheared too early in the season; and second, the wool is not in the best condition until the "grease" rises, which will not be until the weather is quite warm. We usually sell as the clip is ready. I think merino sheep and their crosses the most profitable because they, being smaller, eat less and shear more than the coarser ones.

THEN AND NOW.

"The golden age of the great Elizabeth," appears, but bare and poor when contrasted with our own. Womenservants were paid about three dollars a year, besides one dollar for clothing, and meat and drink. Most of the gentry gave their servants but one substantial meal a day.

The houses of farmers and mechanics were still, for the most part, huts, without chimneys; the smoke escaped by doors and windows, after it had well blinded the inmates. Even the great palaces, as the French ambassador reported, were without carpets. "The floors being covered with rushes, which remain for months, receiving mud, bones and grease from the table; and filth of every kind, until the stench and vermin in these great houses are insupportable." The plague which raged in England in those days was due to the uncleanly condition of the houses.

Strada gives an account of the wedding of the son of Archbishop Parker to the daughter of the Bishop of Chichester, which contrasts oddly with the magnificence and cost of a marriage in the United States.

"The bride had with her as a dower a gelding; for her apparel ten pounds; of her own stock, twelve pounds; and of table linen, one damask cloth and one towel, two pillow bears, two long cushions, one silver salt and standing cup, and, when they rode to see her mother, ten pounds in money."

Napkins and table-cloths were seldom used; forks were almost unknown. Even the gentle Lady Jane Gray made her breakfast on "swine-flesh and ale," cutting and tearing the meat by the aid of a knife and her fingers.

When we contrast this bare, coarse life which the luxury of our own days, the countless appliances with science, art and wealth have brought from every quarter of the globe into an American home, we are apt hastily to call ours the age of civilization.

Yet the genius of Shakspeare and the wisdom of Bacon grew out of that poor outward life; the finest flower of English literature blossomed in it, and men and women found in it what the people of the present who have dainty fare and soft clothing do not possess—good health generally.

Downright Cruelty.

To permit yourself and family to
"suffer!"
With sickness when it can be prevented
and cured so easily
With Hop Bitters!!!

Having experienced a great deal of "Trouble!" from indigestion, so much so that I came near loosing my Life!
My trouble always comes after eating any food—

However light
And digestible,

For two or three hours at a time I had to go through the most
Excruciating pains,
"And the only way I ever got"
"Relief!"

Was by throwing up all my stomach contained. No one can conceive the pains that I had to go through, until
"At last?"
I was taken! "So that for three weeks I lay in bed and
Could eat nothing!
My sufferings were so that I called two doctors to give me something that would stop the pain; their Efforts were no good to me.
At last I heard a good deal
"About your Hop Bitters!
And determined to try them."
Got a bottle—in four hours I took the contents of One!
Next day I was out of bed, and have not seen a "Sick!"
Hour, from the same cause since.
I have recommended it to hundreds of others. You have no such "Advocate as I am."—Geo. Kendall Allston, Boston, Mass.

Columbus Advocate, Texas, April 21, '83. Dear Editor:—I have tried your Hop Bitters, and find they are good for any complaint. The best medicine I ever used in my family. H. TALENER.

$25. None genuine without a bunch of green Hops on the white label. Shun all the vile, poisonous stuff with "Hop" or "Hops" in their name.

TO MOTHERS.

Keep up a standard of principles; your children are your judges.

Remember that trifles to you are mountains to them; respect their feelings.

If you say no, mean no. Unless you have a good reason for changing a given command, hold to it.

Bear in mind that you are largely responsible for your child's character, and be patient with them.

Take an interest in your children's amusements; mother's share in what pleases them is a great delight.

Be honest with them in small things as well as in great. If you cannot tell them what they wish to know, say so rather than deceive them.

As long as it is possible, kiss the children good-night after they are in bed; they like it, and it keeps them very close.

If you have lost a child, remember that for the one that is gone there is no more to do; for those left, everything.

Make your boys and girls study physiology; when they are ill try to make them comprehend why, how the complaint arose, and the remedy so far as you know it.

Impress upon them from early infancy that their actions have results, and that they cannot escape consequences even by being sorry when they have done wrong.

Respect their little secrets; if they have concealments, fretting them will never make them tell, and time and patience will.

Allow them, as they grow older, to have opinions of their own, make them individuals, and not mere echoes.

Find out all their special tastes and develop them instead of spending time, money and patience in forcing them into studies that are entirely repugnant to them.

Mothers, whatever else you may teach your girls, do not neglect to train them in the mysteries of housekeeping. So shall you put them in the way of making home happy.

Take your children yourself, if you can, to places of amusement; let them associate you with their enjoyments; when they are parents themselves the memory of it will influence them in their treatment of their children. For their sakes enjoy life with them if possible; clouds will come to them before long.

Helpless Upon a Friendless Sea!

Who, in taking passage in a great trans-Atlantic steamer, does not feel a thrill of exultation over her magnificent power. Against her the Storm King may hurl his elemental forces, nor pierce her armor, nor stop her onward course.

But let me describe a scene when, one morning in mid-ocean, there came an alarm from the pilot house followed by a cry: "The ship's rudder is lost!" From the confident expression, consternation came to every face. The wheelman being helpless to direct her course, the vessel was at the mercy of wind and wave.

The captain had been negligent—the hangings of the rudder were allowed to wear weak, and suddenly it had dropped deep into the sea!

Strong in intellect, in physical vigor, in energy and ambition, man confronts, undaunted, gigantic tasks and commands applause for his magnificent excitements. But, all unexpectedly, an alarm come—the rudder of his constitution is gone. He has been careless of its preservation; mental strain, excessions sche-ments, irregular habits, overwork, have destroyed the action of his kidneys and liver. This would not occur were Warner's safe cure used to maintain vigor. And even now it may restore vitality to those organs and give back to the man that which will lead him to the haven of his ambition.—The Traveler.
